Upskilling Your Supply Chain Team to Solve Tomorrow's Problems

Our May 17th Logistics and Distribution Peer Group meeting discussed priorities and different approaches to help leaders upskill their teams, which can be used in supply chain management as well as other areas across the company.

Skills have become “the new talent currency” across all industries. Now more than ever, organizations of all sizes are seeing a need to improve and refine the skills of their workforce in order to keep up with the rapid pace of change. The event featured three speakers – Suzanne Sherry from human capital consulting firm, excellerate3, Jen Palzkill from Lands’ End, and James Altwies from Exact Sciences – who shared valuable insights based on their companies' approaches for strengthening and developing their supply chain teams.

UWEBC Featured Member: Katie Sweeney from Exact Sciences

This month we are excited to feature Katie Sweeney, Associate Director of Quality and Improvement at Exact Sciences, which just celebrated its first year of UWEBC membership. Katie loves the collaboration with other industries in a similar working environment that UWEBC allows her. She believes learning from people with varying backgrounds is crucial and valuable. "Bringing groups together on similar and relevant topics is the best way to learn," she says.

Digital Symposium

COVID-19 catapulted economies and businesses everywhere into the digital-first world. Technology had already been reshaping industries, business models, product and service value propositions, and supply chains when the pandemic hit. Businesses slow to change have become even more vulnerable to disruption. How will our digital leaders adjust their approach to organizational and technical architectures, risk management, talent acquisition, decision making, and data management to meet this volatility?

Join us in this special virtual UWEBC program open to UWEBC members and non-members alike to explore new, proven approaches and innovative technologies to address the practical challenges faced in today's volatile business environment. We are collaborating with Americas' SAP Users' Group (ASUG) to bring you a unique virtual learning forum.
